Testimonials

Mimansa Jethro

2025 Graduate Officer

As a DPC Graduate Officer, you are at the forefront of the Western Australian public sector, experiencing the dynamic and fast paced nature of politics and government.

I experienced this firsthand through multiple rotations across the department, where I was required to be agile and adapt my work to changing government priorities. Throughout the program, I completed rotations in the Cyber Security Unit, Parliamentary and Executive Government Services, Community Safety Policy, and the Office of Early Childhood. These varied experiences provided me with exposure to a wide range of policy and operational functions, while strengthening my problem solving, communication, and stakeholder engagement skills.

Alongside this, the inclusive and supportive culture at DPC fostered learning and collaboration, setting me up for long term success and equipping me with valuable, transferable skills for my public sector career.

Molly Pritchard

2024 Graduate Officer

The DPC Graduate Program has been an incredible experience, giving me the chance to work across a wide range of teams and projects. From Strategic Communications to Native Title Negotiations, Infrastructure and the Regions, every rotation gave me fresh insights and valuable hands-on experience in government policy and operations.

One of the biggest highlights was my final rotation—the Caretaker Project. It was amazing to be so close to the action during the election period, seeing firsthand how everything comes together behind the scenes.

I've been lucky enough to continue my journey at DPC as a policy officer, and I can honestly say the graduate program set me up for success. The mentorship, exposure, and diverse experiences have been incredibly rewarding, and I'd highly recommend it to anyone looking to kick-start their career in policy and government.

Jet Bernal

2023 Graduate Officer

As a DPC Grad, you're always at the heart of important policy discussions offering a fresh perspective that is different from my previous line of work. I felt constantly plugged into the pulse of current events and emerging news headlines (sometimes getting an insider scoop to important policy decisions before it makes it to the 7 o'clock evening news).

What I enjoy about the program is you don't need to come from a specific degree to apply. So many of us came from different degrees and experiences. Though this, I got to work with amazing people from diverse backgrounds, each bringing unique perspectives to the table.

The Graduate Program helped me appreciate the interconnected and cross-cutting nature of policy, where decisions on pressing matters such as youth justice can have rippling effects on Aboriginal engagement and other pertinent community policy issues. This broadened my perspective and highlighted the significant whole-of-government implications of government work, no matter how big or small.

Katrina D'Monte

2023 Graduate Officer

As a DPC graduate, every day is different.

You will be exposed to many unique opportunities and amazing people. You may find yourself working and learning about policy development, working in Parliament House, providing advice to the Premier and Cabinet Ministers, or even working on Government advertising campaigns.

I applied to the DPC Graduate program because I wanted to work on tasks that make a real and lasting difference to the WA Community. As a DPC graduate, you learn new skills very quickly and are supported within the early stages of your career and beyond.

Rotating across different departments was a highlight of the DPC Graduate Program, because you have the chance to find out what areas interest you and can broaden your skillset along the way!

You also get to meet many hardworking and passionate individuals who share their experiences and expertise.

Please apply online through the Jobs WA - Jobs search page by clicking the 'Apply for Job' button on the advertisement.
