He has worked at specialist WA and national law firms as a construction lawyer before setting up his own legal practice 10 years ago. He had a former life as an RICS qualified quantity surveyor in Belfast, London and Melbourne. He has prepared adjudication applications and responses under the Building and Construction Industry (Security of Payment) Act 2022 (WA) (the Act ) and advised clients on associated review adjudication matters and enforcement matters; he has previously provided a similar range of advice to clients under the Construction Contracts Act (WA) 2004 (the CCA ). His Act and CCA adjudication clients cover the field; large and small property owners, strata corporations, architects, engineers, main contractors, subcontractors and others – all over a wide range of diverse construction projects. He has been frequently appointed as an adjudicator under the CCA (including as a named adjudicator in building contracts), and as an arbitrator and expert determiner of construction disputes. Due to previously working as a quantity surveyor, Graham also has a detailed working and practical understanding of all facets of the construction process and construction documents. He has given talks on adjudication and other construction law matters; he has also had articles published in various journals and other publications on leading adjudication cases and other construction law related matters of interest.
