1 Introduction

The Local Coordination program assists people with disability, their families and carers, to advocate, plan, organise and access the supports and services they need to live a good life in their local community. Local Coordinators work with family members and others involved in supporting people with disability, helping them to further strengthen their caring role. Planning is central to the Local Coordination approach. During the planning process, individuals and their families/carers are supported to explore possibilities, plan for the future and achieve the lifestyle of their choice.

Plans enable people with disability to achieve their individual goals for a good life by providing clarity in direction. The resulting plan will reflect each person's chosen pathway. The plan will be flexible, responsive to challenges and changes in the individual's life, and incorporate strategies tailored to their skills, strengths and need for support.

This Planning Framework has been designed for Local Coordinators, to support them during the planning process. It includes guiding questions, example scenarios and resources which can be drawn on as needed.

This document can also be used by individuals, families, carers, service providers and others who wish to learn more about the Local Coordination planning approach. However, it is recommended that this be read in conjunction with 'A guide to planning in Local Coordination'.

2 Vision

People with disability, their families and carers will be able to exercise genuine choice and control over the supports and services they need to live a good life in their local community.

3 Planning principles

- The person with disability is central to the planning and decision-making process.
- Planning is based on the person's wishes, capabilities, and strengths and will provide greater opportunities in the future.
- Planning leads to a more satisfying and secure life and includes safeguards to address vulnerability, enabling the person to take risks and make mistakes.
- Family, friends and other people who are important to the person are encouraged to be involved in the planning process.
- Planning is flexible, outlining realistic, achievable goals and strategies that are renewable and reviewable.
- Planning encourages the use of informal and local community connections ahead of formal, paid supports and services.
- Planning acknowledges the uniqueness and diversity of each person including culture, lifestyle and religious beliefs.

4 Outcomes

Individualised planning supports people with disability, their families and carers to:

- choose how their life will unfold
- identify opportunities to belong and make a valued contribution

- develop their relationships and their connections within the local community
- develop their talents and potential
- adopt valued community roles
- feel safe, secure and confident in their future, and
- access the support they require to achieve their goals.

5 Local Coordinator planning approach

People with disability have traditionally been planned FOR. The Local Coordination approach recognises everyone's need to have a meaningful life where what is important to each person is most valued and central to their plan. This approach is based on universal human rights to be respected, experience a range of valued roles, be part of welcoming communities, enjoy every day experiences and tackle challenging opportunities.

In planning, the Local Coordinator develops a respectful partnering relationship with the person and their family/carers, to ensure they understand the person within the context of their family and community. Planning is based on a series of future oriented conversations where the person with disability is supported to consider how their life is, how they would like it to be, and what it would take for them to get there.

The Local Coordinator supports people with disability, their family and carers to explore strategies which will assist them to achieve their goals (for example, by providing tailored information and suggestions for a range of options to consider). They will also take care to focus on the person's skills, passions and strengths as the foundations for planning their future.

Planning may take place through a series of conversations; however, it is expected that a plan is developed within 90 days of a person with disability first connecting with a Local Coordinator. Local Coordinators are there to support the person, their family/carers, as much or as little as needed throughout the planning process.

Existing support arrangements (e.g. family, friends and local connections) will form the foundations of the plan and be linked to the person's goals. However, sometimes additional support may be required for the person to achieve one or more of the goals in their plan. The Local Coordinator will assist in formulating a clear rationale as an integral part of the person's plan which supports a request for any funding required.

The Local Coordinator has an ongoing role in assisting people to:

- review their progress towards their goals
- keep their plans on track
- re-align their plans to their changing lives, changing goals or unexpected difficulties.

6 Guiding questions

The planning process is personalised, future-focused, responsive and reviewable. It is underpinned by a trusting relationship between the person with disability, their family, carers and a Local Coordinator. The relationship may take time to establish and requires ongoing engagement. The person with disability can choose to involve others in this process (for example, family/carers, friends, support workers, local community members, and trusted staff from specific service providers or mainstream organisations).

The person with disability is central to the process and takes control of their plan to the extent that they wish. Their plan for a good life will be developed from their responses to the following guiding questions:

1. How would I like my life to be? (Vision)
2. My/our story? (Current situation)
3. What would I like to build on? (Long-term goals and Plan goals)
4. How can this happen? (Support strategies)

The plan will reflect the person's aspirations and goals, their current circumstances, and clear pathways to achieving their goals.

A selection of planning tools attached to each question is included as a resource for Local Coordinators to assist with initiating conversations.

Please note: All efforts have been made to acknowledge sources of these tools, many of which have been adapted. Local Coordination acknowledges the wisdom of such thinkers as John O'Brien and Michael Kendrick that is embedded in this framework. The Department of Communities would particularly like to thank Helen Sanderson and Associates, Jane Sherwin, Heather Simmons and The West Australian Mental Health Commission for their permission to use their material.

1. How would I like my life to be? (Vision)

This question addresses a person's need for meaning and purpose in their life. It opens up thinking about hopes and dreams. It is a series of conversations about possibilities and what the person, and their life might become. It is intended to develop a complete picture of their idea of a good life. Opportunities that may never have been considered can be introduced.

The following may help to start these conversations:

- What makes life worth living?
- What does an interesting and fulfilling life look like for me?
- If everything were going well for me, what would it look like? What would I be doing?
- Who would I like in my life? (I may not have met them yet)
- What other things have I dared to dream of?
- What is especially important to me?
- Who do I admire? Why is that?
- How would I like to be thought of?
- What does my ideal day look like?
- What is a bad day like for me?
- Have I ever thought of-----?
- I wonder whether-----?

Suggested resources:

- Visualisations/imagination/drawing e.g. place of relaxation, happiest time etc.

2. My/our story (Current situation)

These conversations focus on a person's identity in the context of their family and community and their experiences. The aim is to develop a shared understanding of how the person's life is now, who is in their life, how they spend their time, and how they feel about it. The conversations should focus on the person's uniqueness, their strengths, interests and capabilities, whilst acknowledging their vulnerabilities and any need for support. Opportunities for change in their life may become apparent.

Some of the following questions may assist in getting a real sense of who the person is:

- What has my life been like so far? What phrase would describe how I feel about it?
- What are some of the key things that have shaped my life?
- What do I value? (culture, religious beliefs as well as family, friends, pet, home, lifestyle)
- What am I very proud of? Why is that important?
- What am I good at? What do I enjoy?
- What do people like about me?
- What do I like best about myself?
- Who are the important people in my life? How are they involved?
- What am I really interested in? What do I do about my interest?
- What do I do every day? Why do I do this?
- How satisfied am I with my life and situation? (For example, my relationships, my opportunities and choices, my health, my occupation, my home, my local community links)
- What am I not happy about?
- What makes me feel unsafe? How could I feel safer?
- What are the challenges or barriers I face?
- What am I responsible for and who am I responsible to?

3. What would I like to build on? (Long-term goals and Plan goals)

A long-term goal is something the person with disability wants to achieve into the future. Long-term goals are usually several years away.

A plan goal is a concise description of what the person wants to achieve by the next plan review date, typically within the next 12 months.

From the earlier questions the person with disability, their family/carers and supporters will have a picture of what a better life looks like to them. People may choose to tackle one or more elements to develop or change. This question aims to engage the person's enthusiasm for a better life and translate this into the goals that they would like to achieve. It focuses on what the person thinks should be built, what should be retained, and what should be reduced in their life.

An example of a good plan goal might be:

Aaron would like to develop his meal preparation and cooking skills (3rd person)
Or

I would like to develop my meal preparation and cooking skills (1st person)

Questions that may assist include:

- What do I need to thrive, not just survive?
- What motivates me?
- What do I look forward to?
- What challenges me?
- What do I want to achieve?
- What is most important to me right now? What would make the most difference to my life? What are my priorities?
- What is working well now? How will I maintain this?
- What skills, experience, interests and qualities would I like to build on?
- What do I really dislike in my life at present?
- What am I worried about? What am I frightened of?
- What information or experience do I need to make the right choice for me?
- If I could offer myself a reward what would it be?

4. How can this happen? (Support strategies)

Support strategies are the actions or activities that will be implemented to achieve a particular plan goal. A strategy needs to be linked directly to a goal to enable the goal to be achieved within the agreed timeframe.

This question leads to discussion of how goals can be achieved, what steps best suit the person's chosen outcome, who could be involved, and when these actions can be undertaken. This part of the plan should be practical and steps should be attainable. It must link inextricably with the preceding parts of the plan. The person and their family's existing connections, local friendships and support, and what is already working well should be central to their plan. New and different opportunities to engage these connections in the person's life should also be considered. People should think about the idea of "just enough" support to achieve their goals.

An example of a good strategy might be:

Aaron will learn how to prepare and cook a range of meals by following step-by-step visuals; and through regular opportunities to practice. (3rd person)

Or

I will learn how to prepare and cook a range of meals by following step-by-step visuals; and through regular opportunities to practice. (1st person)

The following questions may assist in the development of a clear, comprehensive action plan:

- What will it take to help me build a better life in my community?
- What will I do to make the changes I would like?
- What will others do?
- How will I increase and strengthen relationships and connections? Where in the community might be a good place to start?
- What extra opportunities might there be for me in the community?
- What will I continue?
- What will I start doing?
- What will I stop doing?
- Which of my skills, experiences or knowledge do I want to build?
- What kind of support do I need to help me do what? How will I make sure I have “just enough” support?
- When and how often do I need help?
- What are the challenges in supporting me?
- When would I like these changes to happen by?
- What are my first steps?
