Shea Hatch
Project Director/
Landscape Architect

UDLA

A registered Landscape Architect with a Master's in Public Health and a Bachelor of Conservation and Land Management, Shea currently works with multi-award-winning studio UDLA, who specialise in landscape architecture, urban design, and community development.

She has experience working on the delivery of all phases of traditional development, most recently in large, complex public realm projects. Shea has delivered several health-based research projects and has worked in the not-for-profit health sector. She also maintains an active role with the Australian Institute of Landscape Architects and is currently the WA President.

Shea believes the built environment is linked to community mental, physical, and social health and is an advocate for the delivery of high quality, equitable public realm outcomes; especially for at-risk communities, where the risk factors for poor social and physical health are often compounded by poorly designed environments.
