

WA Relationship Authorisation Manager User Guide

Managing authorisations for a person to act on your behalf

Once authorised a representative can act on your behalf. The authorisation will remain in place until you remove it or it expires. An authorisation expires if it has an end date.

Using the WARAM, you can:

- view the details of the authorisation or a pending request;
- amend the authorisation end date or approval or decline a pending request either to extend or shorten the time the authorisation will remain in place;
- remove the authorisation; or
- temporarily disable an authorisation. This function is used when you want to prevent your representative from acting on your behalf but do not want to permanently remove their permission. A disabled authorisation can be re-enabled at any time.

To manage the authorisations for another person to represent you (“a representative”), you will be required to sign in using an account against which you have already verified your identity and which was used to send the invitation which resulted in the authorisation. This restriction is a protection against identity thief and fraud.

If you are a sole trader with an ABN or you want to manage invitations for a person to act on behalf of your business or volunteer organisation, please refer to the instructions titled, “Managing authorisations to act on behalf of a business”.
