

Understanding your Land Tax Notice of Assessment

You must notify RevenueWA of:

- any errors or omissions regarding land ownership
- any taxable land that has been incorrectly exempted on the assessment notice
- any separate assessment notices you received for land held in the same ownership
- any assessed land used as your primary residence or any change to the usage of the land
- the commencement of construction/refurbishment of your new residence on any of the assessed land
- any assessed land you own beneficially that has been assessed together with land you own as a trustee and/or any land you own as a trustee that is receiving a residential exemption

If you don't notify us before the due date for payment shown on your assessment notice, you may incur a penalty or be liable to prosecution.

If your land tax assessment is not paid by the due date or is underpaid, the full outstanding balance becomes payable. Penalty tax for late payment may then be imposed and you will lose any entitlement to discount for early payment.

Are you experiencing difficulty paying your land tax? It is essential you contact us before the due date specified on the land tax assessment notice. Alternative payment arrangements may be considered.
